In fact, some of the opinions were not so far from the line with Vatican orthodoxy. In 1999 the future benedicto xvi, Cardinal joseph ratzinger, then head of the congregation for the doctrine of the faith, the executor of the Vatican of doctrinal orthodoxy, had issued a document warning Roman Catholics of the dangers of yoga, transcendental meditation and other "statal" practices on the ground that could "degenerate into a worship of the Christian body" than prayers. this ad has not yet loaded, but your article continues below. courtesy of warmer bros. But other pronouncements caused embarrassment, as her claim that emanuela orlandi, the 15-year-old daughter of a Vatican employee who had disappeared in roma in June 1983, had been abducted for sexual parties with Vatican police and foreign diplomats, and subsequently murdered. Meanwhile, some felt that their claim that the scandals of sexual abuse that had engulfed the church in recent years were proof that the antichrist was waging war against the holy headquarters provided a moral escape hatch too easy for priestly abusers. the possessed person, Father Amorth argued, "is not a bad person, just a suffering person." Father Amorth claimed to have carried out between 70,000 and 160,000 exorcismos, often doing the rite several times with one person, and women, apparently, were particularly vulnerable. this ad has not yet loaded, but your article continues below. when in 1996 it was reported that of the 40 exorcismos performed in rhoma each week, about 80% of the "possed" were middle-aged women, middle-class, explained that women were "more vulnerable because they are the ones that most of them are going to see clairvoyants, mediums, card readers, attend bees andto Satanic sects", speculating that "it may be that the men of Eve" Father Amorth believed that people possessed by Satan tended to vomit pieces of iron and shards of glass, and had a collection of regurgitated bits and pieces eÁÁÁ nails, keys, chains, plastic figurines eÁÁÁ to prove it. During one session, he recalled, eÁÁÁthe Devil told a woman that he would make her spit out a transistor radio and, lo and behold, she started spitting out bits and pieces of a radio. Such things are rare, but they happen.eÁÁÁ This advertisement has not loaded yet, but your article continues below. He had seen possessed victims levitate, and he credited the 1973 horror film The Exorcist with giving a eÁÁÁsubstantially exacteÁÁÁ representation of what it was like to be possessed by Satan. Even those who dismiss exorcism as eÁÁÁAmumbo jumboeÁÁÁ could see some value in Father AmortheÁÁÁs services. He had only come across about 100 cases of genuine possession, he claimed. Most of his clients were psychiatric cases, whom he refused to see unless they had seen a doctor first and whom he often treated in consultation with psychiatrists. eÁÁÁMost times thereeÁÁÁ no actual diabolical presence, and my job lies in suggesting (to) those that come to me to live a life of faith and prayer,eÁÁÁ he explained. eÁÁÁAnd this is enough to assuage the fears of those afraid of the Devil.eÁÁÁs ills. eÁÁÁ This advertisement has not loaded yet, but your article continues below. Gabriele Amorth was born in the northern Italian city of Modena on May 1, 1925. His father and grandfather were lawyers. As a teenager he fought in the Italian resistance (days before his death he was awarded the Medal of Liberation by the prefect of Rome in recognition of the eÁÁÁimportant roleeÁÁÁ he played in the struggle against the Nazis). After the war he studied law and was briefly deputy to the future Italian prime minister Giulio Andreotti in the Young Christian Democrats. Father AmortheÁÁÁs calling, though, was the Church. He entered the Society of St Paul in 1946 he met with his founder, Giacomo Alberione, and was ordained in 1951. It was many years later, in the mid-1980s, that he became an exorcist at the request of his bishop, working as a journalist for Catholic media. In 1985 he was appointed exorcist of the diocese of Rome by Cardinal Ugo Poletti. Five years later, he founded the International Association of Exorcists with other priests and led it to 2000. This ad has not yet loaded, but your article continues below. In his book An exorcist narrates his story, Father Amorth described his life as hard, passed misunderstanding and marginalised, although never totally stripped, by his own Church. In recent years, however, interest and demand for exorcism has experienced a global boom, leading the Vatican in 1996 to publish a new set of guidelines that replace a manual of use since 1624, and to increase the number of trained priests to address the phenomenon. Father Amorth was a deeply traditional figure, passing through with many in the Church, although not with Popes John Paul II or Benedict XVI, both of which were reported to have made exorcismos, or with the current Pope Francis. In 2014 the International Association of Exorcists was officially recognized by the Vatican. In one of his last interviews, published at the end of last year, Father Amorth told the journal Faithful Insight that the world had forgotten God. "We see it in laws that go totally against nature such as divorce, abortion, 'gay marriage'." God soon "would admonish humanity in a very powerful way," he warned. "He knows how to remember his presence." Jun 23, 2014 Robert Federline valued that it was amazing that I found this was an excellent book. It is not a book of drama, hypocritical or sensationalism. Instead, it is a calm, prayerful and sincere warning against thead his bad influence in this world, and how it has grown in modern society. It is it is interesting that the front of the American edition/translation is from p. benedict j. groeschel. It is not a book of drama and bombing or sensationalism. Instead, it is a quiet, prayerful and sincere warning against the devil and his evil influence on this world, and how he has grown up in modern society. It is especially interesting that the front to the American edition/translation is from p. benedict j. groeschel. for those who are not familiar with him, Fr.Greeschel is a Capuchin friar, and is a celebrity in the world of Catholicism, known for ideas, intelligence and holiness. fr. groeschel is also a psychologist. your front to the American edition is not a sincere endorsement of the book, but asks the reader to exercise when trying to determine whether a problem you face is a doctor or a diabolical, the precaution exercised by Fr. groeschel on the front is repeated in the text on many occasions. fr. amorth, the exorcist of roma, instructs in this work that the person who should be more skeptical of claims of possession or interference and demonic influence, is actually the exorcist himself. This is, of course, a solid council. We don't need to give the devil greater power than he already possesses. However, the purpose of the book is to keep the devil's problem in the discussion. Too many times there are people, including priests and bishops, who deny the actual existence of the devil. If people deny their existence, it is easier for him to do his job, because no one protects against him. This is consistent (as explained by Fr. Amorth himself) with the vision given to Pope Leo xiii. only some of the details are set in this book, and p.indicates how they were related to a © l. vision vision took place on October 13, 1884, when the Pope had a vision of God speaking to Satan. The devil claimed that he could destroy the church if he is given 75 to 100 years, and greater power over those who would surrender to the devil. God said He would grant the devil such time and power. This vision, naturally parallel to the book of Job, with the Church instead of Job. Since then, the battle with the devil has been waged on many levels. The devil has been granted the enlarged power in the world by the way he is ignored and God is denied. I have heard a priest preach a homily in which he reflected on the Gospel in which Jesus expelled the legion of demons saying that "of course, demons do not really exist. We know today that this is just a mental illness. "It is true that there are many cases of mental illness. Fr. Amorth warns against misinterpreting these cases as cases of possession. Many ill-diagnosed cases as mental illness, however, are cured by the Rite of Exorcism, which is spiritual medicine. Most of their "cures" are therefore initiated with prayers of blessings. Father Amorth deals with his subject in a very rational and dispassionate manner. Because of his many years of experience as the exorcist of Rome, he has been able to study the subject of demonic influence in a very scientific way. It breaks down the problem into understandable and manageable divisions, in a way that is not established in the previous literature. It gives readers categories of demonic influence, which he qualifies as Possession, Obsession and Oppression. It also warns against curses and hexagonets. Most people think these are also purely psychological. It is the common belief that a curse cannot be effective unless the cursed person is aware of it, and therefore psychologically harms him because of the victim's belief thatThis is based, however, on the experiences of Father Amorth. Father Amorth declaresWriting this book is to let people know that the devil is real, and the battle against it is ongoing. He hopes that the bishops and other priests will take the difficult task of the exorcist and work to defeat the devil. He also remembers the public in general the reality of this problem, and how one can be subject to demon influences. This includes even what the majority of people think as totally harmless, such as the persistent use of dirty language. As last, it is possible that the majority of the people consider both exorcism and this book, because it speaks of exorcism, as a Catholic issue. Obviously the book is written from a Catholic perspective, since the author is a Catholic priest who has the position of exorcist. Even site, however, that the demon influence is not limited to the Catholics. Nor is the practice of exorcism. There are many protesters who also act as exorcists, and people around the world have experienced demon possession, opposite or obsessive, without taking into account their religion or culture. The devil is not respecting people and will use any power that he has against all members of the human race. The Catholic Church can be a particular target of it, but it takes the life where he finds them. .more more
